Uncertainty, Anxiety and the 3Ss Framework

Outline

Anxiety is on the rise; so says the research and most teachers and students would probably agree. More measurement, new standards, greater pressure, more diagnoses, more pastoral care, new initiatives, more meetings, more differentiation, more research, more podcasts, more inspirational posts.....

Description

Clare Ward and Jamie Galpin (co-authors of the Anxiety Workbook for Supporting Teens who Learn Differently) will talk about the 3S system, a simple framework that acknowledges the difficulties that students and teachers face each day and proposes a new way to look at anxiety and design support for all.

Passionate about developing greater flexibility in education systems and learners, their work runs parallel to the ideas that SCERTS and Universal Design for Learning bring to the classroom. Taking a transdiagnostic approach, they want to cut through the acronyms and assumptions they lead us to make, to offer support to all teachers and all learners, helping everyone become an expert in how they teach and learn most effectively. Their training makes space for self-reflection and the sharing of ideas, whilst offering research based solutions and practical activities to take away.

Outcome

As a result of the sessions those attending will:

- have a better understanding of how to make learning more accessible for all
- have a practical framework to guide lesson design to make them more inclusive for all
- be able to broaden the universal support that is offered to all pupils, including those with SEND, to foster a greater sense of belonging

Audience

Secondary schools and setting, however Primary settings are encouraged to book as well.
